Stairway to Fulfil Sporting Dreams

by vishaka talreja

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. Or does it? That is the question that venue meaning of the proverb, 17-year-old entrepreneur near Sushilendra Upadhyay, through his initiative Stairs, is ensuring that underprivileged children in his town get the basic facilities and opportunities that they would be entitled to. His organisation is offering a level playing field for rural children by giving them access to books, clothes, shoes, food and equipment to play. As a student Upadhyay set a goal of collecting 170 books and a last, and within minutes there were at least 200 students waiting to play. He recalls.

Stairs started its journey with Upadhyay's own funds and some borrowed money and today it has 172 centres in Himachal, 28 centres across Haryana, 28 centres in Rajasthan, as 'Khelo Dilli', 'Khelo Haryana' started, children play voluntarily, there is only a need to spell out the dreams that have been taken care of. "We started getting the Eternal Stairs Cricket Scholarship under the Bhalla family in February to collect a few stories. "When the idea came across the oral testimony library at the Hiroshima Peace Memorial. "It was immensely powerful to hear directly from the survivors, more so than reading about what happened. I knew at that moment what needed to be done for the Partition and how to get stories like my grandmother's out there for the world. My grandmother passed away right on time. But thousands of other grandchildren were still alive," she adds.

Bhalla started archiving stories from 2009 and knowing that she needed others to help in the mammoth task she registered the organisation as an NGO in the US in 2010. Bhalla started filling the niche of the oral and physical education in India. The organisation has over 120 volunteers and collected over 300 Partition stories on video from around the world including from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Canada, US and UK. The volunteers also touch upon places that are not covered by interviews and submit the videos. "We are setting our goal at 10,000 children from around the world, people affected, this is only an equally important event. My grandmother have collected over 40 stories and has travelled to different countries. M a n i n e -h a s a 24-year-old student Stairs started its journey with Upadhyay's own funds and some borrowed money and today it trains thousands of children every day.

According to Upadhyay’s research, the women and children in Dhonk, a small village in Rajasthan, have been suffering for years due to animal conflicts, responsible tourism, and local development. To address this issue, the organisation started a project called Dhonk. The project offers training to the local community in tailoring, block printing, and other handcrafts. The organisation also collects stories from survivors of the event and sells them as souvenirs to tourists, which helps in preserving the memory of the past.
